MISCELLANEOUS READING. PRINTING OFFICE RULES.

The following office rules, which we clip from a Philadelphia exchange, should be carefully observed by visitors: 1. Enter quietly.

Be short. Transact your business.

Don't touch anything.

Say nothing unnecessary.

Engage in no controversy. Keep six feet from the table.

8. Don't talk to the workmen. 9. Hands off the papers. 10. Eyes off the manuscript and copy.

The observance of the above simple rules is of far greater importance than the "unitiated" can possibly be aware of; but when the fact is taken into consideration that, in preparing matter for publication, the minds as well as the hands of the printers have to be constantly employed, the propriety of the thing HENRY L. SIMPSON, will be supported as a litself, will be apparent at a glance. It is an utter impossibility for any "compositor" to "set type" properly, in the midst of "noise

> Saw-dust is said to be excellent for littering stables, as it absorbs the liquids and thus preserves the ammonia. It is useful, also, on the score of the horse's health and comfort. It is injurious to an animal's feet to stand in the liquids of his stall; it is hurtful to his eyes and his stomach, and his lungs, to remain long in an atmosphere charged with the powerful vapors arising from those liquids .--Dry muck answers very well to scatter daily in the stables, though saw-dust is much neater. It is quite important, however, in clearing out the stalls daily, to mix a little muck or plaster with the saw-dust and manure, to prevent the whole from violent fermentation.

> The Dayton Gazette says that a student at Ox ord, Miami county visiting Troy a few days since, was told that a Dutchman had been made to believe that a lion had escaped from a menagerie and was prowling around. The student thought it funny to play him a trick, so got inside of a buffalo skin and secreted himself in the cellar. The Dutchman was sent down on some pretended errand, and the lien sprang at him, growling. The Dutchman caught up a cudgel and laid Mr. lion sprawling, where his friends found him senseless. Remedies revived him and he will probably recover, a wiser if not a better man.

> There is a tomb in front of a colored conventicle in the lower part of Philadelphia, which covers the mortal remains of a colored preacher who was immensely popular in his time, and whose death was much lamented. The epitaph, after setting forth at great length the virtues of the deceased, winds up as folllowe: "Vox Populi Vox Dei; Go thou and do
